Ideal pearl case for keeping pearls, jade, and tortoiseshell

A good environment for storing pearls is one that has low levels of light (ultraviolet rays) and humidity (changes in humidity).

It has the 3 principles of care:

“wiping”, “humidity control”, and “dark storage”.

Ultra-micro fibers press down on the pearls from top and bottom and absorb dirt.

Tips to keep Pearl

Pearls have a low Mohs hardness of 3.5, so they should be stored in a jewelry box with a compartment to prevent them from contacting other gems. Pearls should not be stored in extreme dryness, high temperature, high humidity, or constant exposure to sunlight.

If pearls are placed in a dry place, they will shrink as they lose moisture and wither. If this dryness and humidity are repeated, cracks may appear in the layer. In addition, pearls may become discolored or lose their luster under the influence of heat or ultraviolet rays. Therefore, avoid storing them in sunlight or under fluorescent lights.
